By Alex Davis Updated September 22, 2017 Family Feud has given contestants a chance at big money for over 30 years. Steve Harvey is currently hosting the show and asking the families various survey questions for $20,000 and a new car. The show is looking for families on a regular basis every spring and the tape shows in the summer. If your family wants a shot at being on Family Feud, you need an audition during open casting show calls. Sign up for the audition Family Feud, usually listening to families starting in April or May. Audition locations vary. The main base and offices of the show are located in Los Angeles, California, and that's where many teams are located. However, after moving to Orlando, Florida, in 2010, families in the east can play now. Other auditions across the country are announced throughout the year. The show's website usually announces them. Call the party hotline at 323-762-8467 to book an audition. Audition ProcessContestant casting producer Sarah Dansby says casting is a short procedure, commenting: They come, we book them, they call the hotline. They come with their family, they fill out the application, we take a picture of them and we play the mock version of the game. Families must come to audition with five or six family members. Casting producers will choose the top five if you choose to go on the air. Families then play the mock version of the game, competing for at least two questions so each member can answer. After that, families are free to return home and cross the fingers they are chosen for the show. The whole process usually takes 15 to 20 minutes. With casting producers looking for Family Feud is looking for contestants who play the game well, so trying to win a mock game is very important. However, the show is also looking for great personalities who make great television guests. Casting producer Sarah Dansby added: The only thing they need to do is the most important thing is not to be shy. Jump up and down, smile, clap, prepare your family. But playing the game is good. Some people have it and some don't. It's one of those things of trust. If you're shy, it won't work for the feud. About ten percent of the families who audition make it onto the show. Waiting to be a CastAfter audition, families tend to wait a few weeks before finding out if they are chosen. Families are notified by receiving a postcard or phone call informing them when to appear, where to go, and other information. Families who don't hear for months are usually not selected for this season, but can audition at a later time and try again. Add-ons add fun and useful features to a PowerPoint presentation. Feud debuted in 1976, one of many great game shows created by Goodson-Todman. The original presenter was Richard Dawson, an actor and comedian who at the time was best known for his work on the series Heroes of Hogan, as well as numerous appearances on the match game panel. Since its inception with Dawson at the helm, Feud has seen several different hosts cancel, re-elect and move on to syndication. The show is steady with a loyal following of fans and continues to bring new fans on board with every season it's on the air. One of the big things about family feud what the game itself is almost just like it was back 1970s though there have been tweaks and game changes over the years. You can flip on the show today and recognize it instantly, even if it's been decades since the last time you watched. The team consists of family members bound by blood, marriage or adoption. The two families play against each other in each game, with teams made up of five family members each. While some parts of the game have changed over the years, this is the main format. The answers to the questions are unique in that they are not actual answers at all. They are based on responses provided by the 100-person survey team. Contestants can come up with the most popular answers to each question that are placed on the game board and revealed how the teams provide them. Since the answers are provided by the polls, this is where the line is, the Review says! It comes from. The main game starts with one family member from each team, take to the podium and face the first question. The contestant who buzzes in the first place gets to provide the first answer. If this answer is the answer to poll number 1, his family gets control over the question. If not, the opposing participant gets to try to provide a higher response rating to earn control of their family. The team that gets control of the question then provides more answers, one at a time. They are not allowed to consult each other during this part of the game. If this answer is not one of the most popular, the family gets a strike. If a team can guess all the most popular answers on the board before they get three punches, they win the round. If the team ends with three strokes, control of the round goes to the opposite family. This team has one chance to come up with one of the remaining answers on the board to win the round - if they don't, the other team gets points. Generally speaking, each game is played by four main rounds. If there is time, two more rounds can be played, but this sudden death lightning rounds. The team with the highest point at the end of the main game goes to the Round of Fast Money. Two family members play in this round. One family member stays with the host, and the other disappears behind the scenes. The first participant is given 20 seconds to answer the five survey questions that have scored how many people gave the same answer in the survey. Once the first player's scores are identified and counted, they cover up and the second family member goes out to play. The questions are the same, but this time the player gets 25 seconds to complete the round, and if the answer is repeated the contestant hears the buzzer and is asked to give another answer. If the combined scores of members of both teams are more than 200, the family wins the main prize. The point values assigned to each answer are based on the number of people who responded in the survey. Only the most popular answers make it on the game board, so points don't always add 100. The current format of the game assigns one point to the first two rounds, with points doubled in the third and tripled in the fourth round. Each host of Family Feud brought their own style to the show, though some were better than others. Feud hosts included: Richard Dawson: 1976 to 1985, 1994 to 1995Ray Combs: 1988 to 1994Louie Anderson: 1999 to 2002Richard Karn: 2002 to 2006John O'Hurley: from 2006 to 2010Steve Harvey: 2010 presenting a well-themed episodes of guests and celebrities. There have been various celebrity tournaments over the years, including themed games in which tv stars play against each other. There have also been competitions between sports teams and stars, students, divorced couples, musicians and game show hosts. Seasonal shows, such as the always anticipated Halloween episode, are also popular. In 2008, NBC revealed a prime-time Family Feud Celebrity series hosted by Al Roker. All the celebrity families appearing on the show donated their winnings to charity. To learn more about Family Feud, visit the official FamilyFeud.com website.
